Jamie Whittle's first book describes his foot journey to the source of the Findhorn, one of the world's great salmon rivers, and his canoe journey back down. His observations and thoughts along the way are nourished by his many previous journeys around the world, to Alaska, Ladakh, Central Africa, the Caribbean and the Pacific Islands. His concerns are informed but he has optimism. His first book has already been recognised by such as Sir John Lister-Kaye and Cameron McNeish.

Jamie Whittle is an environmental lawyer based in the Highlands of Scotland. He was educated in Scotland, England and America where he is a Morehead Scholar out of the University of North Carolina.
